Course title: Women's and Gender Studies in Transatlantic Context

Course number: FU-BEST 27

Language of instruction: English

Contact hours: 45

ECTS-Credits: 5 U.S. semester credits: 3

Course description

The sex/gender system, such as many social systems of categorization, serves to group individuals. It represents an act of dividing, i.e. categorizing individuals as male or female; yet it also, paradoxically and simultaneously, connects individuals through shared membership in a category. This course on gender and women's studies in a transatlantic context focuses on the boundary—that which both divides and unites. We investigate sexed and gendered boundaries between bodies, communities, cultures, classes, races, ethnicities, religions, sexualities, and nations.

Our exploration of boundaries is grouped into three units: In the first, we examine the way sex/gender boundaries are mapped onto the body; this includes the history of sex differences within scientific discourses, transsexual and transgender definitions, and attempts to control women's health and reproduction. The second unit analyzes conceptualizations of citizenship as practices of drawing boundaries, and we examine how these boundaries can connect individuals in solidarity, as well as separate out others. We look at the gendered ideals of citizenship, the history of women's rights, women's movements, and intersectionality between different types of marginalization. The final unit explores the boundary between the public and the private in an investigation of gender (politics), migration and work, including sex work and domestic work.

In this course we use statistics, history, political and social sciences, filmic representations, news reports, essays, medical texts, biographies and field trips to conduct our interdisciplinary investigation. Our guiding approach is one of transnational feminism, which seeks to find solidarity between women by understanding and embracing their differences. Ultimately, our analysis of a multiplicity of subject positions and histories reveals the overall instability of the sex/gender system. For example, something that one culture views as inherently masculine may be viewed as inherently feminine in another. Therefore, our transcultural examination helps us understand the socially constructed nature of a system that is often viewed as natural, unchanging, and stable.

FU/BEST Program

By the end of the semester, students will be able to:

1. Discuss gender and gender roles in a nuanced manner.
2. Formulate academic theses about some of the major social, medical, and political concerns facing women, transgender, transsexual and intersex people in North America and Europe.
3. Discuss some of the issues related to gender politics in Germany.

Independent Project Subjects/ Sites

In Berlin exists a variety of feminist projects and institutions for women. Choose one of the sites as a subject for your independent project. (These are only suggestions you may choose any other site related to gender politics and get it approved from your instructor.) Visit the site, collect data and/ or participate in an event. In your report describe and analyze the aims of your particular feminist/ women's project and situate it in the context of the women's movement, feminist/ gender politics (2-3 pages).
