

fu:binar on Undergraduate Programs in Germany

09.12.2025 | 14:00 hrs. Berlin time | Online

Target Group

The seminar's target audience includes pupils learning German, their parents, and German teachers at schools and universities who advise pupils and students on entering German universities.

Content and Objectives

Studying in Germany is not only generally free of charge, but also challenging. In addition to excellent language skills, degree programs emphasize independence, active participation, and the freedom to design one's own studies. German universities therefore offer virtually unlimited opportunities for anyone who wishes to take advantage of them.

The seminar provides information about the options for entering university after graduating from high school in Eastern Europe and Central Asia, both through the Studienkolleg (preparatory college) and after completing one or more courses.

Referent

Tobias Stüdemann, Director Eastern European Office of Freie Universität Berlin

Working language: English.

Please register via this link, the website, or QR code below:

www.fu-berlin.de/easterneurope