

About the Authors

Rebekka Rohe studied International Relations (MA) at the Freie Universität Berlin, the Humboldt-Universität zu Berlin, Potsdam University, and the Hebrew University of Jerusalem. Before that she finished her studies in Liberal Arts and Sciences (B.Sc.) at Tilburg University and the City University of Hong Kong. Her expertise lies in peace and conflict studies with a specific focus on migration, gender, and violence from a feminist and postcolonial perspective. At the moment, she is involved in a research project by the German Development Institute on transnational knowledge cooperation including a research stay in Rwanda and India.

Suh Mary lived in Cameroon until she was trafficked to Germany in 2017. After her escape, she has worked as mentor for other women*, who experienced human trafficking. Currently, she is based in North-Rhine-Westphalia and attends German classes. Suh Mary is actively sharing her experiences in order to raise awareness and to learn more through the interaction with others. Due to the grave danger of being exposed to her former traffickers, she has to remain anonymous for this publication. The name Suh Mary is therefore a pseudonym.
