

NEW MEDIA AND RESEARCH

Tuesday, July 15, 4.45 – 9.00 pm

JUNGES
WISSENSCHAFTSFORUM
DAHLEM

Junges Wissenschaftsforum Dahlem is part of Freie Universität Berlin's institutional strategy „VERITAS – IUSTITIA – LIBERTAS: International Network University“. It is a platform through which junior researchers at Freie Universität and its partner institutions on the Berlin-Dahlem research campus can engage in the creation and exchange of ideas. It enables researchers to look beyond the confines of their disciplines, to discuss issues of common interest, to get information about funding opportunities, and to organize workshops.

New Media and Research

Digital technologies are becoming more and more an engine for creating new ways of conducting and communicating research. With the rise of special online platforms and tools, the traditional frame within which scholars used to discuss and publish their findings is likely to change profoundly: papers can be worked on collaboratively in real time and revised in open peer review, non-used data can be made freely available to other researchers, unsolved problems can be shared with specialists around the world. Even communication with the non-academic public is facilitated through blogs, YouTube, and social media. Junges Wissenschaftsforum Dahlem will offer you two rounds of expert workshops in which you can learn and discuss how new media are transforming research and what challenges are still lying ahead.
